

“POWERFUL VOICES”

National Breast Cancer Coaliton & National Breast Cancer Coaliton Fund

“Research. Access. Influence.” This is the National Breast Cancer Coalition’s mantra. We have been saying it and acting on it with passion since the beginning.

NBCC was formed in 1991 by a small group of women who saw and felt the indifference surrounding breast cancer: indifference to a disease that killed tens of thousands of women each year and affected millions of others; indifference to the chronic underfunding of breast cancer research; indifference to the obstacles and barriers to quality health care. In response, with determination, hope and vision, NBCC was born.

In that time we’ve made spectacular progress. Where once decisions about breast cancer research and policy were made without us, now advocates’ voices ring out. And the most powerful voice of all is the National Breast Cancer Coalition.

We know that to end breast cancer, we must educate the public, activate the policy makers and attack this disease from all sides, which is why we have two organizational arms:

- The National Breast Cancer Coalition Fund, a 501(c)(3) organization that conducts research, education and outreach activities, and
- The National Breast Cancer Coalition, a 501(c)(4) organization that lobbies Congress, the Administration and the states for improved public policies.

Together, these arms create an unstoppable force for progress in the fight to end breast cancer.

“Breast cancer is a political issue.”

And today, NBCC's nationwide network of grassroots advocates is larger and more effective than ever. With more than 600 member organizations and 70,000 individuals, our network includes a Field Coordinator system with volunteers in every state and a National Action Network that alerts breast cancer activists across the country about urgent policy issues.

The Lancet, a prestigious international medical journal, recently described NBCC as “perhaps the world's most influential medical consumer lobby group.” This is quite an impressive accolade from such a renowned publication. Of course, it does not mean NBCC has achieved our goal—the eradication of breast cancer for all. It does mean that we have thrown open the doors to decision-making venues, and let breast cancer advocates stream inside.

During 1999-2000, the National Breast Cancer Coalition used our power to get heard and get results. Here, we briefly share with you some highlights of our grassroots advocacy in action.

Unstoppable Momentum

In October 2000—after four years of tireless advocacy on the part of NBCC activists—the Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act was signed into law. This groundbreaking federal legislation guarantees medical treatment to low-income, uninsured women who have been screened and diagnosed with breast or cervical cancer through a national program operated by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Before the bill was passed, low-income women could be screened for free through the CDC program, but once diagnosed with cancer they were on their own to secure treatment—no easy task for women with no insurance and little money. Our nationwide network of activists refused to accept that the government would screen and diagnose women with cancer, but then leave them on their own to scramble for treatment.

We researched various policy approaches to the problem. Through our advocacy arm, NBCC members worked with a Senate sponsor to outline and design legislation, then planned and implemented strategies to get it enacted into law. Our activists wrote letters to their elected representatives, called, faxed, e-mailed, published opinion articles, spoke out on local media, visited Congress and rallied. We made sure policy makers understood our demands—and responded.

One member of Congress told us, “My office was besieged with calls and faxes from women and men in my state trying to get this bill voted on and passed.”

Another member of Congress said, “In my years of service in the House, NBCC emerges as the most effective partner I have ever had. The Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act is law today because of NBCC’s leadership and their members’ superb advocacy.”

Thanks to the powerful voices of NBCC’s grassroots activists, the Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act creates a life-saving link between diagnosis and treatment. It would not have happened without us.

Powerful and United Voices

This exciting breakthrough was not the only legislative success NBCC can claim during 1999-2000. We also achieved two vital policy priorities:

- In both 1999 and 2000, NBCC successfully lobbied for funding of $175 million each year for the Department of Defense Peer-Reviewed Breast Cancer Research Program, which we helped create in 1992. NBCC continues to play a leadership role in this important research initiative and in 2000, the total cumulative funding for this innovative program since it began reached more than $1 billion.
- As a result in part of determined lobbying by NBCC activists, President Clinton signed an Executive Memorandum requiring Medicare to reimburse all routine patient care costs incurred while participating in a clinical trial. Clinical trials are the only way to learn if laboratory research will have any meaning for human beings, and this legislation will make it easier for more people to participate in them.

In 2000, the National Breast Cancer Coalition launched our influential campaign to Make Breast Cancer History. We reminded voters across the country that breast cancer is a political issue. We urged them to look beyond pink ribbons and postage stamps to a candidate's record on substantive breast cancer policies before they cast their votes.

Breast cancer advocates spread this message everywhere, from farmers markets to candidate forums, from college campuses to Internet chat rooms. We gathered signed pledges from people throughout the nation who promised to vote with breast cancer in mind and to hold their elected officials accountable on policies that will make a major impact in breast cancer.

Some familiar voices joined in the demand to Make Breast Cancer History. Lifetime Television distributed four million postcards in restaurants and bookstores across the country, placed pledge cards in national magazines, hosted a "Women Rock!" concert in Los Angeles and actively gathered pledge card signatures through their programming and website. Actresses Susan Sarandon, Julianne Moore and long-time NBCC supporter Rosie O'Donnell taped public service announcements, as did journalist and breast cancer survivor Linda Ellerbee.

Fresh Thinking, Fresh Victories

1999-2000 brought a number of other victories and firsts:

- NBCCF launched our Breast Cancer Quality Care Initiative to establish what constitutes “quality health care” for breast cancer and help make it available to all women. Beginning with a Breast Cancer Quality Care summit in 1999, the Initiative continually brought together activists, scientists, policy experts, insurers and health care providers to define quality health care. The results
- Partnering with a local member organization, NBCCF launched its State Forum program in California where we educated California state legislators about treatment and policy issues they may be asked to vote on. This forum—and its attendant rally and constituent visits—proved so successful that similar events with other NBCC state organizations are planned.

“We won’t stop until we find a cause and a cure for breast cancer!”

of this exploration were presented in 2001 when NBCCF published a Guide to Quality Breast Cancer Care, which provides patients with the information and tools they need to increase their chances of getting the highest quality care available. The free Guide is available through our website (www.stopbreastcancer.org) or by calling 1-800-622-2838.

- Our educational arm, NBCCF, activated our revamped Environmental Initiative, which involves advocates, scientists and policy makers in creating a research research strategy to explore the currently unknown connection between environmental factors and breast cancer.
- In recognition of NBCC's critical role in breast cancer public policy, we are often invited by Congress, the Administration and States to testify on our position on various breast cancer issues. NBCC grassroots members testified before many decision-making bodies that included the Senate Finance Committee, the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Defense, the U.S. Department of Labor and the President's Cancer Panel. Our highly informed advocates addressed issues such as the Department of Defense Breast Cancer Research Program, the Women's Health and Cancer Rights Act, the Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act and other important topics.

- NBCC released the results of our first national poll about breast cancer. Nine out of ten respondents agreed that breast cancer research should be a federal priority and said it was personally important to them to guarantee women with breast cancer access to high quality treatment. This personal concern carries into the voting booth: 57 percent of respondents said they would be more likely to vote for a candidate who makes finding a cure for breast cancer a top priority.

Growing Power and Participation

Even as we sparked new initiatives and achieved policy breakthroughs, we conducted our ongoing activities with the same energy and commitment that has always propelled our movement. We know that the power of our raised voices derives not only from passion but also from the rigorous preparation of our activists.

In both 1999 and 2000, springtime brought several hundred breast cancer activists to Washington, DC for NBCCF's Annual Advocacy Training Conference. Participants sharpened their advocacy skills and learned about current and emerging issues in breast cancer treatment, research and policy.

"I've learned more about breast cancer advocacy in three days than I ever could have imagined," one participant raved. "The sense of empowerment and possibility were awesome."

Following the conferences, activists rallied on Capitol Hill and crowded into legislative offices to educate members of Congress and their staffs about breast cancer concerns and to seek commitments for action. As a result of these Lobby

Days, hundreds of members of Congress have officially signed on to NBCC's legislative priorities.

The National Breast Cancer Coalition Fund continued to educate advocates on the science of breast cancer and enhance their leadership skills through Project LEAD (Leadership Education, and Advocacy Development). This acclaimed science-training course was held four times a year in locations across the country including Baltimore, Cincinnati, Miami and San Diego. Participants mastered scientific concepts and learned how the research process works, equipping themselves to speak out as knowledgeable consumer advocates on peer-review panels and other scientific bodies that make decisions about breast cancer research.

Project LEAD has become so well known and respected that breast cancer advocates from Britain, Cameroon, Germany, Israel, Nigeria, the Philippines and Sweden have traveled to the United States to participate in it. NBCC continued to link graduates to one another through the graduate newsletter, Project LEAD Update, and The Journal Club, a group of graduates that critically appraises scientific research articles.

Raising Our Voices Worldwide

NBCC members serve on decision-making bodies that include the President's Cancer Panel, the National Advisory Council for the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality, the National Cancer Policy Board, the National Cancer Advisory Board and others. During 1999-2000, the Coalition also made sure our voices were loud and clear around the world. We conducted the Second World Conference on Breast Cancer Advocacy in Brussels, Belgium, where more than 230 breast cancer survivors, activists and health professionals from 43 countries and six continents shared information, strategies and support.

NBCC President Fran Visco participated in the Tenth International Congress on Anti-Cancer Treatment in Paris, and was the only non-scientist asked to speak at the World Summit on Cancer. In recognition of NBCC's advocacy, she received an award from the Mayor of Paris and was one of only five individuals, one of who included French President Jacques Chirac, selected to sign a World Summit charter out-lining actions to eradicate cancer worldwide.

Our Powerful Vision

The National Breast Cancer Coalition Fund worked to educate and energize diverse constituencies of the breast cancer advocacy world, from activists to legislators to researchers to the public to visionaries whose voices may lead to the fresh approaches to policy and research. Here are some highlights:

- Our Team Leader Initiative gave grassroots activists intensive training on advocacy techniques, the federal legislative process that raise new questions about breast cancer, meet criteria adopted by our Board, and where we can play a substantial role. During 1999-2000 these involved trials of a vaccine to treat breast cancer and trials to test the effectiveness of a targeted drug.

- NBCCF introduced a series of position statements on scientific and medical issues to keep the public informed and help separate hope from hype. Through resources such and NBCC's legislative agenda. Graduates serve as Team Leaders to guide our advocacy efforts.

- NBCCF conducted Congressional Forums for members of Congress and their staff to learn from experts about breast cancer science and policy. We created a new Capitol Hill newsletter designed to help Members and staff better represent their constituents.
- Through our Clinical Trials Project, NBCCF collaborated with the scientific community to conduct research, design protocols and set research priorities. NBCCF participates only in trials as these position papers, our website and our grassroots network, we translated complex scientific concepts into accessible language so advocates can educate themselves and their communities about scientific developments and the issues involved.

- Launched at the Aspen Institute, the Aspen Project is NBCCF's think tank where we convene visionaries from inside and outside the breast cancer world to break through the limitations of “what is” and what we imagine “could be.” During the past two years, participants have envisioned a new pilot model for funding and conducting breast cancer research, called “The Research Greenhouse.”

Reaching In, Reaching Out

NBCC's photographic tribute, the Face of Breast Cancer, reaches into the heart of our mission. Featuring photographic portraits of 84 women who have died of breast cancer; during the past two years, Face of Breast Cancer has moved thousands of viewers in Atlanta, Cleveland, Indianapolis, Los Angeles and Washington, DC.

During 1999-2000, friends of the National Breast Cancer Coalition reached out with extraordinary support for our activities:

- Revlon Chairman Ronald O. Perelman, whose unyielding support continues to make these events so successful, chaired NBCCF's annual New York gala in 1999 and 2000. The New York galas drew celebrities such as Ellen Barkin, Chevy Chase, Rosie O'Donnell and First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton. The Coalition's first and second annual San Francisco Gala attracted strong supporters including Genentech President and CEO Arthur D. Levinson and singer Bonnie Raitt.

“Through advocacy and action, we intend to make breast cancer history.”

- NBCCF's President's Council members continued their long track record of incredible generosity as they rose to the call to provide financial support to the Coalition's fight to end breast cancer. President's Council members are leaders in their communities, professional fields and the philanthropic world who are willing to make a significant financial commitment and reach into their own communities and networks to build support for the Coalition's work.
- Funding from The Joyce and Irving Goldman Foundation, Inc. has helped create and grow the Coalition's Clinical Trials Project which can change the way patients get information on and participate in ongoing and upcoming trials. The Vance Wall Foundation continued their extreme generosity to the Coalition, particularly in the areas of education and public outreach. The support of these Foundations has helped form the backbone of some of NBCC's most important programs.

- Warren and Jan Adelson opened their gallery, the Adelson Gallery, in New York to host a benefit reception for NBCCF. Not only did they provide extravagant food and drink for guests, but they also donated an original and rarely seen drawing by Mary Cassatt to be raffled during the event.
- The Avon Products Foundation, through The Avon Breast Cancer Crusade, served as a leadership funder and helped underwrite crucial components of our Quality Care Initiative and Project LEAD.
- When Patrick Dinley, President and CEO of Norelco, received a Lifetime Humanitarian Award from the Housewares Charity Foundation, he donated the monetary portion of the award to the Coalition.
- NBCCF benefited from the Internet boom when Internet companies including SelfCare.com, Proflowers.com, actBIG.com and Netpulse donated portions of their proceeds to the Coalition.
- Ann Taylor stores donated profits from CD sales to NBCCF; while the Council of Fashion Designers of America donated a portion of the profits from sales from Saks Fifth Avenue's Folio catalog; Hard Rock Café auctioned autographed guitars and

Marie Claire Magazine sold bracelets at a discounted price – all to benefit the Coalition.

- Roger Birnbaum and Pamela West-Birnbaum conceived and co-chaired NBCCF's first Celebrity Golf Tournament in Los Angeles. Celebrity duffers including James Garner, Kelsey Grammer, Robert Loggia, Kyle MacLachlan, Joe Mantegna, Jane Seymour, Mark Wahlberg and Dweezil Zappa helped raise funds at this event.
- In both 1999 and 2000, WomanTours continued their dedication to the Coalition and donated proceeds from their 4,250-mile, ten-state bike tour for women to NBCCF. Gloria Smith, a breast cancer survivor and stalwart supporter of the Coalition, leads the tours.

NBCC worked hard during 1999 and 2000 to reach out to breast cancer survivors and activists. We redesigned our website and changed the address to a phrase every advocate can remember: www.stopbreastcancer.org. We increased the national press coverage of NBCC's work and reorganized our Volunteer Field Coordinator System. We sent our newsletters to a growing national readership and kept our nationwide network of activists instantly apprised of policy changes and calls to action.

Powerful Commitment

Women with breast cancer have led a revolution in research, access to medical care and consumer influence. This is a fight we are determined to finish; because we will not pass it on to our daughters and to their daughters.

At NBCC we say it loudly and we say it often: We must put an end to breast cancer. We must know what causes it, how to cure it, how to treat it, how to prevent it. We will not rest and—let's face it—we won't let anyone else rest, until we find the answers.

Through our public events, our educational programs, our relentless lobbying and our knowledgeable network of advocates, NBCC is considered an authoritative voice on breast cancer issues. In fact, during a public hearing on breast cancer funding, one leading Senator stated that, "The National Breast Cancer Coalition is one of the most powerful—if not the most powerful—coalitions in our society."

But the most powerful voice belongs to you, our members, friends and supporters.

As one activist said, "The Coalition has educated me. It has made me understand which issues are important and how to lobby for what I believe in...I now feel like I am not alone in this fight." She is not alone because you dared to speak out, to raise a banner, to write a check.

As you were reading this report, another woman received the news that she has been diagnosed with breast cancer. That woman is not alone either, thanks to you.

This is the vision behind the powerful voices of the National Breast Cancer Coalition: breast cancer survivors and advocates fighting together to end this epidemic. With our clasped hands and our united voices, we can do it. And we will.
